You can continue to make all the files of these points you want. I chose to make 3 points files, as you can see above. The important thing is to make sure that the points you do are all equidistant from the central point. Now that you have designed your points, it's time to connect them. Draw a straight vertical line that connects the points that go up and already and a straight horizontal line that connects the points that go on both sides. See above for an example of this step on how to draw a mandala. So, draw another series of points to the same distances from the center of the first series of points. See the example above. The yellow arrows indicate where the new row of points is located. Try to make them with an angle of 45 degrees compared to perpendicular lines. Draw four files of points, making a large X shape. See the example above. So, use your ruler to connect the points you have just made. Now your photo should look like the image above. Now you want to connect the points to the circles. To do this, start from a point and draw a curved line to the next point, and so on. Don't worry about making the circles "perfect". We are not worried about perfection here! Take one step at a time, going from dot to dot. Okay if you make mistakes. In the example above, you can see 2 instances in the most external circle in which I made a mistake the first time. If it is the first time that learning to draw a mandala, trust me - will be easier for the next time you do it. Just make sure to draw slightly enough to easily erase any errors. Tip: If you don't want to take the â € ‹â €‹ Time to draw your circular grid, you can download and print your polar graphic card. This is excellent for sketches, but if you use this graphic card for a finished piece, remember you'll still get those little blue lines under yours When you draw your own grid, you can erase the lines! Now that you've drawn the basic outline for your mandala, you can begin drawing designs in your mandala! You can use a pencil, colored pencils, ink, crayons, or whatever you choose. I chose to use two different colors of colored pencil to draw in my design. You can start from the center, or you can start from anywhere where you feel inspired to make some marks. Using the lines and circles you drew as guidelines, you can draw shapes like circles, triangles, raindrops, loops, etc.The important this is to repeat your pattern. For example, if you draw a circle on one of the lines, be sure to draw it in the same spot on the other lines.This creates repetition, which is a key element in creating a mandala. As you draw more and more designs, your mandala will start to look more complex.The key is to take it slowly, drawing one shape at a time and going around the whole circle drawing that one shape in the right place.Then you build on that shape by drawing other shapes around the circle in the same manner. Here is how the mandala looks with all the designs drawn in. Pretty cool!You can leave your mandala just like this, or you can choose to color it in.I decided to color my mandala with watercolors...Ã Â Voila! Here is my finished mandala.Using watercolors, I colored in the design using colors that were soft, introspective, and uplifting.Now you know how to draw a mandala!
