According to the CDC, just today, in one day, 100 people will die from a drug overdose involving some kind of pain med. Um, what's up doc? It's easy to think that overdoing pain meds is safer than abusing illicit drugs like crack or heroin due to the "regulation" of prescription drugs or because some professional wrote it out on a piece of script paper. A ANot. Often regulation is a joke. It is too easy to not know how these drugs will combine with other drugs one takes. Okay, what got me thinking about this stuff is a brilliant movie I saw recently at the Beacon Independent Film Festival called Bottled Upà Âwritten and directed by Enid Zentelis.à ÂItà Âmade me think of the times that my mom has naively taken her pain meds too far and became zombie mom. It made me thrilled that I don't even fill the pain med scripts that have come my way on occasion even for legitimate pain. I tough it out, I don't want that stuff on my shelf or in my body. It's not worth the risk. The "feel good" or "feel numb" factor is far too seductive. Of course, there are people that take these pills properly and absolutely need them to survive real deal pain. Unfortunately, we can't live in a world without something to numb the pain. Just saying... it can get pretty messy if one doesn't have their thinking caps on. The movie had many themes, but the The line was the insidious and common disease of codependence and qualification. Melissa Leo played a mother who reached the extremes to protect her daughter addicted to her pain. The dynamic among them was so convincing that she made me feel that I was part of her triam of Bermuda and in the shattered lives of her. Without giving anything away, he had an impressive and important end that left me with a cycal and confusing sensation inside. The movie does a job increased to keep it light, but it was an important announcement of public service on a very dark theme. It made me think. The dukes sent the postcard, but they asked the lab not to send the reward. In 1794, a Japanese sailor named chunosuke matsuyama and 43 companions were caught in a storm and shipwreck on an island of the south Pacific. without supplies, the entire crew eventually died; but not before Matsuyama wrote a message saying of his misfortune, carved in coconut wood and slipped in a bottle. Nobody knew what had become of the group until the bottle was discovered 150 years later near the Japanese village of hiraturemura. The 19-year-old Nora Hegarty, approached the ill-known titanic in 1912 to meet the burke sisters who had settled in boston a few years earlier. before sailing, burke's mother gave her a bottle of holy water. While the titanic began its descent into the sea, He managed to write a message, "from Titanic, Adió to all, Burke de Glanmire, Cork", which he put in the bottle of holy water. The artifacts were kept in the family for nearly a century before being donated to the Cobh Heritage Centre in 2011. In 1914, British World War I soldier Pvt. Thomas Hughes wrote a letter to his wife, sealed it in a ginger ale bottle, and tossed it into the English Channel. He died two days later fighting in France. Fast forward to 1999, when a fisherman found the bottle in the River Thames. It was too late to deliver the letter to Mrs. Hughes, who died in 1979, but not too late for Hughes' 86-year-old daughter, who was only 1 when her father died. The message was delivered to her at her home in New Zealand. In 2018, Tonya Illman was walking around sand dunes on Wedge Island (near Perth, Australia) when she discovered an old gin bottle with a rolled-up paper tied with string inside. The paper was dated June 12, 1886, and was from a German Naval Observatory wanted to learn more about ocean currents much like the "drift bottles" of ancient times. Therefore, the notes would ask people to write where and when they discovered the bottle is currently on display. In 2011, a Scottish fisherman named Andrew Leaper was pulling in his haul near the Shetland Islands when he spied a bottle in the catch. Within, he discovered an old letter, a very old letter ¢Â in fact, at the time, it was certified as the oldest message in a bottle ever found by the Guinness Book of World Records, though the Wedge Island bottle has now staked that claim. The message was scrawled by Capt. C. Hunter Brown of the Glasgow School of Navigation and was sent to sea in 1914 along with a whopping 1,889 other bottles.
